Here is an update of the Star Trek Starship Creator. And, yes, I know that Vonda Kaplan is a . Star Trek: Starship Creator Warp II is similar to its predecessor from 1998, but with upgraded graphics and an extended list of building options. Q: Can I construct a two-way dictionary (key/value) from a TreeSet? While processing a list of records in memory, one needs to search for entries that match a particular value and return the "records" and "parent" values. Naturally, since I'm accessing records in a TreeSet, an O(log N) search is required to find the matching record. However, what if I were to keep a Map or a Dictionary as a transient data store, instead of TreeSet? In that case, I would not necessarily have to pre-store the tree. Am I right in assuming that in that scenario, I would need to construct the tree from the Map and TreeSet while the program was still running, in order to conserve memory? Or am I missing something? A: You must have some kind of tree structure to store your data. This might be a TreeSet but you can also use a different data structure like an ArrayList. In case you have a HashMap you can simply use it as a tree. The only restriction is that you need to create a new tree for each record. So if you have two records with the same hash code then you need to create two tree nodes even if they actually have different values.

HashMap map = new HashMap();
map.put(1, new Node(1,null,new TreeSet()));
map.put(2, new Node(2,null,new TreeSet()));
Map> tree = map.entrySet().stream().collect( Collectors.toMap(Map.Entry::getKey, Map.Entry::getValue, (e1,e2) -> e2, (e1,e2) -> e2));
TreeSet nodes = tree.get(1); // nodes is null because your HashMap
now has a single entry with key 1
Now you can just add values to the TreeSet and you can see that the tree will be correctly formed by the Map. tree.
